* People with convictions are encouraged to apply. Some positions require a security badge. For employers requiring security badges, federal regulations require more stringent 10-year background checks. Certain convictions may disqualify you (see the Code of Federal Regulations, 49 CFR 1542.209). For employers not requiring security badges, the Fair Chance Ordinance (FCO) applies, and only directly-related convictions may be considered. The FCO limits which convictions employers can ask about and requires them to consider evidence of rehabilitation or background check inaccuracies (see Article 49 of the SF Police Code or <https://sf-hrc.org/fair-chance-ordinance>). Either employer may, or may not, require drug testing.
